New Professional Sports Stadium Rises in Indianapolis

Lehigh supplied cement for concrete slab construction for the new 63,000-seat Lucas Oil Stadium.

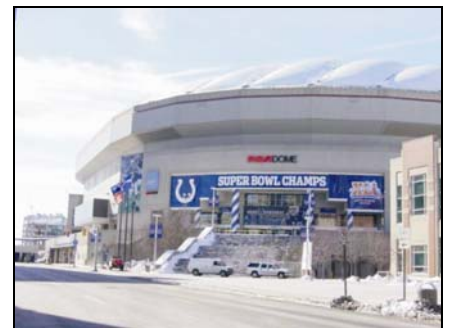

While the Colts and the city of Indianapolis revel in being the XLI Super Bowl Champions, they are watching Lucas Oil Stadium change the skyline of downtown Indianapolis.

Scheduled to open in 2008, Lucas Oil Stadium will be a three-deck, seven-level multi-use building with a retractable roof that will seat 63,000 and expand to 70,000. The stadium project cost is approximately $675 million.

In addition to professional football games, the stadium is scheduled to host the semifinal and final rounds of the Men's Final Four in 2010, and the Women's Final Four one year later. The city has also put in a bid to host Super Bowl XLV in 2011. The Colts' Super Bowl win this year will strengthen their chances.

The current Colts home, the RCA Dome, will expand the Indiana Convention Center. Lehigh supplied the cement for some of the concrete slab construction of the new stadium.
